A cross-sectional survey was conducted on 1086 schoolchildren (five to ten years old) and both their parents living in a rural area of north India, to investigate the impact of farming on the prevalence of common corneal disorders. A random sample of villages was chosen, in which the headmaster and the attendance secretary of the two government-run schools were asked to provide a list of children who were present on the day of the survey. In addition, all parents of children in the list of the school were requested to provide contact information. Schoolchildren were selected by simple random sampling, and parents were contacted through the phone. A total of 1086 parents (aged 21 to 42 years) and 1086 children (aged five to ten years) completed the survey, with a participation rate of 98%. Prevalence of any corneal disorder was 50.5% (95% confidence interval [CI] 47.5-53.5) in the children, and 11.1% (95% CI 9.2-13.2) in the parents. Prevalence of keratoconus in children was 0.5% (95% CI 0.0-1.8), while in the parents it was 2.5% (95% CI 0.0-7.4). Prevalence of punctate epithelial keratopathy (PEK) was 28.1% (95% CI 25.3-31.0) in children, and 5
